

Indian Accent to debut in London

The empire strikes back with makhan malai

Raj Aditya Chaudhuri

JULY 14, 2017

Potato sphere chaat, white peas ragda at Indian Accent.

After titillating palates in New Delhi and New York, Indian Accent is taking its culinary wizardry to the Old World. The famed restaurant, consistently rated in the top in Asia, is set to open in London this autumn.

The new outpost will be located on 16 Albemarle Street in swish Mayfair, previously the home of another popular Indian restaurant Chor Bizarre. As expected, the new restaurant will feature chef Manish Mehrotra's unique style of combining the best ingredients from around the world and treating them using the most quintessential of Indian techniques to create a menu that is wildly unpredictable. In the best way possible, of course. Think galangal-infused patarani macchi, potato sphere chaat, meetha aachar spare ribs, and more.

Galangal-infused patrani mekong basa, tomato-shorba essence.

The décor will also be equally eclectic and representative of India with brass and marble everywhere. There will even be a private-dining space on the lower ground floor for those intimate dinner dates. The empire has indeed struck back.